EMPLOYEE SPOTLIGHT:

Kenneth Derossitt
was nominated by Shelia Winningham!
Kenneth has been with Pacesetters since 1999.

Thank you, Kenneth, for your hard work and dedication!

Employee Spotlight: Shelia says, "This has to be the most patient, caring gentleman on the face of the earth. I have NEVER heard him raise his voice or show even a hint of getting upset. The person he cares for is very active and requires a LOT of attention and assistance. I admire him for the way he takes care of the person he supports. He goes above and beyond."

Let's Talk About: CQL—The Council on Quality and Leadership Personal Outcome Measures—Factor Expectations (What We Look For)

Indicator 6: People Are Treated Fairly

Within any society, community, or group of people, situations exist where total freedom to act, do, or decide is not possible. Limitations may occur as a result of laws, community or group norms and the needs of other people. When limitations are imposed, we expect that we will have the opportunity to be heard, fairly and impartially.

Rights limitations may occur as a result of the supports needed by a person, organizational policies or rules, lack of resources, or a desire to protect people from possible harm or risk. Regardless of the source or intent, people are entitled to have these limitations reviewed and possibly removed.

People are treated fairly if and when rights limitations are imposed, there is adequate due process. People are informed of options, consent is obtained, and they are listened to. Due process procedures are applied when limitations on personal freedoms or rights have occurred or are contemplated. A fair and impartial hearing in disputes is provided.

Rights limitations are always viewed as temporary measures. Organizations provide training and support to people so that restrictions and limitations are removed.

Organizations also review and change policies, practices, or programmatic decisions that limit or restrict people.

People have the right to least restrictive training and treatment alternatives, freedom of movement, communication, access to personal possessions (including money), and positive behavior interventions, when necessary. Other critical areas include guardianship decisions, denial of opportunity (such as employment or services), and restrictive procedures and limitations imposed by others.

Indicator 7: People Are Respected

Respect is how we show our regard for each other. Respect indicates that we believe someone is a valued person. Everything we do and say to people makes a statement about their perceived importance. People are treated with respect and dignity. Respect is more than the absence of negative comments or actions. Respect is demonstrated in how we interact with people. Interactions that promote respect do not draw undue attention to a person's condition or differences. Supports, in fact, emphasize and capitalize on the person's capabilities. Respect means listening and responding to the person's needs with the same promptness and urgency that anyone would expect. When people as for assistance, they are entitled to receive a meaningful response.

Supports reflect concern for enhancing people's status. Staff respect and defer to people's opinions and preferences throughout the planning and decision-making process. People are challenged by the service activities and encouraged to try new things.

Respect is reflected, directly or indirectly, in everything that occurs in a service relationship. Positive regard and respect is demonstrated by providing people with meaningful work and activities, privacy, and advocacy.

References to, and interactions with, people promote self-esteem. Patterns of interaction reflect what is typically expected for most people. Expectations for achievement are high and supports are not intrusive or demeaning. Staff show significant concern for each person's feelings and avoid anything that might cause the person any personal, physical, or social discomfort.
